Good Queen Bess

Elizabeth I was queen of England for forty-five years, from 1558 to 1603. During her reign many exciting things happened in England and overseas. Sometimes the country was in danger, as when Spain tried to invade.

Many famous Englishmen lived during the time Elizabeth was queen. There were heroes like Sir Francis Drake and Sir Walter Raleigh, who went exploring in parts of the world that had not long been discovered. They returned to England with wonderful stories of happenings far away. They brought new plants from America, potatoes, tomatoes and tobacco; and also the first turkeys. English ships traded with India, Russia and remote countries where few foreigners had ever been.

Men who stayed at home also helped to make England a great country. It was once said that during Elizabeth's reign England became 'a nest of singing birds'. Men like William Shakespeare, Christopher Marlowe and Edmund Spenser wrote splendid plays and poetry that will last forever and ever.

Test 15

Read the following text and answer the questions given below.

1 By trade we mean the exchange of goods for money or for other goods, and this exchange can take place within a country and also between different countries. The latter is essential because every country requires a great number of commodities and no country can produce everything it needs. Time is limited, resources are limited and climatic conditions in different parts of the world vary. Therefore from very early times countries have found it necessary to trade with one another. They have been obliged to trade in order to satisfy their needs for goods.

2 Not all countries have the same resources. One country may be rich in something which another lacks and therefore an exchange of goods between countries is necessary. Some resources can be worked only where they are found. For instance, coal is mined chiefly in the USA, Great Britain, Germany and Russia because it is found in plenty in these places. Most nickel comes from Canada, most gold from South Africa and most silver from Mexico because these countries are rich in these resources. Sometimes a country may need minerals but it may not have them and in that case it is obliged to trade with a country that has.

3 The climate in different parts of the world varies greatly and one region can grow crops which another cannot. Some crops will grow only under particular climatic conditions or in particular soil. That is why so much of the world's coffee comes from Brazil and why almost the entire world supply of jute comes from the Ganges delta in East Pakistan. Very often a country may require a commodity which it cannot grow and then it has to trade with a country that can.

4 Sometimes the people of a region may develop special skills in the production of a commodity and this commodity may in time get a name for its quality. For instance, Ceylon tea and Mocha coffee have got a special flavour and quality of their own and this is partly owing to the places where they are grown and partly owing to the local method of manufacture. If a country wants these products, it will have to trade in order to obtain them from the regions that produce them.

5 Therefore no country can exist without international trade and countries are obliged to trade with one another to satisfy their needs for goods and to get a wider range of commodities.

1. Say whether the following statements are True or False. Put a tick (✓) in the relevant column. (1/2 x 4 = 2 marks)

		True	False
1	Every country requires a great number of commodities
2	It is not necessary to trade with one another
